Land Owner Can Determine Who Can Hunt On Property

SANTA FE, N. M. - The owner of private land has the right to designate who he will let hunt on his property, according to W. D. Barker, Santa Fe lawyer.

Vernon Park, in Colfax County, Davis County, Utah, and, is open to public hunting, as long as the owner has a "recreational use permit" for the area. The permit is good for one year, and allows the owner to hunt on the land during the hunting season.

Under the state game department, Baker was told, the state will not act until he is able to prove that his parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership. The state will not act until it has determined that the parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership.

Barker emphasized that his parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership. The state will not act until it has determined that the parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership.

Barker said that he believes his parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership. The state will not act until it has determined that the parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership.

This notice by Mr. Barker, issued by the Santa Fe Conservation Commission, has no legal significance under state law, says attorney W. D. Barker.

At the same time, Barker pointed out that this is not the same as the state's decision that the parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership. The state will not act until it has determined that the parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership.

Barker said that he believes his parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership. The state will not act until it has determined that the parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership.

The state commission has no legal authority to act on this parcel of land, says Barker.

This notice by Mr. Barker, issued by the Santa Fe Conservation Commission, has no legal significance under state law, says attorney W. D. Barker.

Barker said that he believes his parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership. The state will not act until it has determined that the parcel of land is not owned by the state and is not under state ownership.

The state commission has no legal authority to act on this parcel of land, says Barker.